For Canadian Presbyterians, the living Word of God is Jesus, the Creator’s Christ, made known in relationships through the illumination of the Holy Spirit.

David’s series of drawings captures the diversity of understandings found in the scriptures as the early church grappled with the question, “Who is Jesus, the Christ, for us?”

We continue to explore that question in the gatherings of the Rabbit Hole Gang. You are always welcome to join us whenever you are able.

Following the Revised Common Lectionary (RCL) Year A – Advent 2022 through to Transfiguration 2023

Many Christian congregations around the world follow a common schedule of bible readings for each Sunday. They consist of readings from the Hebrew Scriptures, the Psalms, the Acts or Epistles of the Apostles, and the Gospels. The major principle behind the lectionary is that each Sunday members of congregations around world will hear the same voices of writers week by week. Their considerations of these writings, through the work of the Spirit of the Creator's Christ, will form a force field of forgiving and reconciling love that works wonders in and for the world.

It is organized on a three-year cycle and designed to include most of the Bible in that timeframe. There are ongoing debates about what is included and what is not, but this schedule of readings has gained broad acceptance. In Canada, the RCL is encouraged or mandated by the Anglican Church of Canada, the Canadian Baptists of Western Canada, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada, Grace Communion International Canada, the Lutheran Church–Canada, the Mennonite Church Canada, The Presbyterian Church in Canada, and the United Church of Canada.

You can see the whole of the RCL, along with art, prayers, and commentaries related to the scripture passages, at the website maintained by the library at Vanderbilt University - <https://lectionary.library.vanderbilt.edu>.

The outlines for each Wednesday include the following information based on the elements in the worshipping on the next Sunday, so our explorations in the Rabbit Hole Gang inform our conversations that day and enrich our communal spiritual disciplines at Brentwood in nourishing souls to flourish in the mercy and grace of Jesus Christ through welcoming, worshipping, learning, and serving. You will find the following information in each outline:

- the date with the name of the Sunday according to the Christian calendar
- the four readings from the RCL for that Sunday with brief notes on the content
- the sermon titles

- the word(s) to ponder
- the hymns.

To increase the range of voices you bring into your consideration of these bible passages, you may want to read/sing through the hymns and/or consider the sermon title and word(s) to ponder prior to the Wednesday conversations.

There is also a brief outline of midrash, an approach to the study of the scriptures rooted in the traditions of Judaism around which we improvise. This summary was composed by the Rev. Dr. Elisabeth R. Jones, minister with Cedar Park United Church in Pointe Claire, PQ, and is based on her doctoral project. We are deeply grateful for her permission to use it.

Midrash: A Way of “Turning” a Biblical Text

You know how when you turn a cut-diamond to catch the light, different facets of the same diamond refract the same light differently, so you see many colours of the spectrum? This metaphor may be what the second century Rabbi Ben Bag Bag had in mind when he encouraged people to take any Biblical text and

*Turn it, and turn it, for everything is in it.
Reflect and grow old and grey with it.<sup>1</sup>*

This way of turning sacred texts this way and that, so that God’s light catches the text in different ways, depending on changing contexts and circumstances, is as old as the Bible itself, where we find younger texts (for example Paul’s letters or the Gospels) which ‘turn’ an older text (e.g from the prophets or psalms), to show how they can be reinterpreted in light of new contexts for God’s people. The process of turning a text is known as “midrash” (from the Hebrew verb דָּרַשׁ darash, which means to search, probe, ponder, seek). While individuals can turn texts, the process is far livelier – and far more likely to transform the way we live our faith – when done in community.

Midrash as an interpretive process is deeply rooted in the Jewish tradition and continues to this day. One contemporary Rabbi has described the process as

“reading the Bible with question marks”, not just as an intellectual activity but as a “personal journey” in which we can “glimpse the light of old souls” who saw the Holy in the words of Scripture, but also “to find that light within our own souls” and lives.<sup>2</sup>

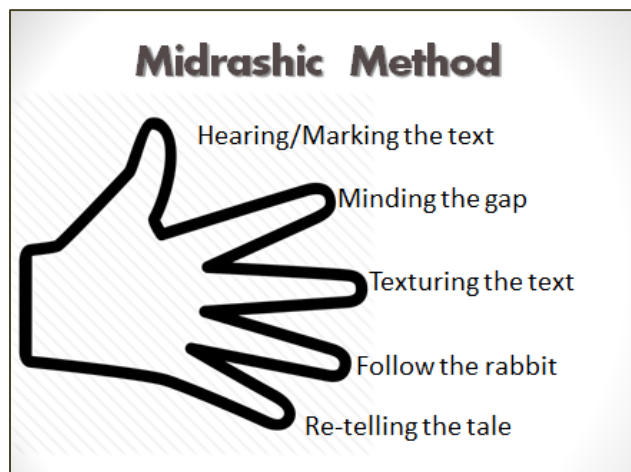

Some Christians may worry that this is not “the way” to study a Biblical text; we’ve become used to thinking one text means one thing, as if it were some sort of mathematical equation. However, Jesus was a master “darshan” (one who turns a text), as you can see so many times when he turns an ancient text (like Deuteronomy 6) to bring new light to bear on its meaning, as it meets the present circumstance (See Matthew 22:34-40). In similar fashion we see Peter “midrashing” the prophet Joel to bring light to the resurrection, when he preaches to the crowd at Pentecost (Acts 2), and Paul sees Isaiah’s description of holy mystery as the best way to describe the apparent folly of faith in the crucified Lord of glory (1 Cor 2:9;16), Jesus Christ.

A Christian Midrashic Method

This simple way of using a “midrashic approach” to Bible study has been developed over the past eleven years in the Christian community of faith of Cedar Park United in Pointe Claire, QC. It’s a five-finger process:

1. Reading/Marking the text

Hear it first (listening is how most people have encountered Scripture). Next, print off or mark up the text- with any of YOUR reactions, questions, shocks, surprises. Note repetitions, odd words, gaps (what’s missing?)

2. Minding the Gaps

Share everyone's "gaps" (discovered while marking the text). (DON'T answer the questions yet, let them fill the room!) Identify the key or pressing ones. Be ready to use commentaries, online resources, and human wisdom.

3. Texturing the Text (Putting the text into its biblical context.) Who wrote it, when, for whom? Who shared it? Who passed it on? What layers are added now that the text has come to us?

4. Follow the White Rabbit (a reference to Lewis Carroll's Adventures in Wonderland; Alice followed the rabbit, and entered a world both recognizable and strange). Some element(s) of a text just beg to be followed; go there! Look things up, and see how this particular point intersects with your own life.

5. Re-telling the Tale

When Scripture re-writes us, we get to re-tell it! How would you re-tell this text? (As artist, poet, pray-er, preacher, person of faith?) Share others' re-tellings of this text (e.g. Songs, art, or contemporary re-tellings, e.g. Godspell, etc.)
